When two rich British best friends find themselves stuck in Hollywood after a massive stock market crash wipes out their multi million pound portfolio, drastic action is called for. Getting to a man like Harvey Weinstein is not as easy as one might think even with good James Bond skills and gold Gucci high heels but with relentless faxes, emails and love letters to their hero, the women finally break in and end up enticed, embroiled and embedded in the fabulous world of Miramax Films with no money, no plan, no clue but always a solid purpose. This explicit, Hollywood kiss and tell from two middle aged women before enlightenment is not for the faint hearted, a roller coaster ride of extremes these women are prepared to go to to somehow convince Harvey of their good intentions to save an impoverished Fresco genius and all get rich in the process? Looking for Harvey turns into a collectively, hilarious and exhausting journey. Along the way the women encounter many top Hollywood stars, Tommy Lee, Sharon Osbourne, Tom Cruise, Gene Simmons, Steve Martin and even manage to blag themselves a top William Morris Agent. Follow their dream and be prepared to laugh out loud, as their internship in Hollywood has them pitching, bitching, bothering and blagging everybody from Disney to MTV. This hilarious and outrageous story actually happened and the little pink treasure Looking for Harvey Weinstein shows a clear view of the fall of Miramax from the cheap seats.
