How do you tell your teenage sons their mother has been murdered? How do you mend your own shattered life when, for the second time, your wife, best friend, life partner has been tragically killed?

Saturday afternoon, February 3, 2003, Carol Mercado Miller left her Las Vegas home for a walk. She never returned. Monday morning her body was discovered at a nearby construction site. She had been brutally strangled. Her murderers have never been found. For over twenty years Carol was my wife and life partner... she was not the first, nor the last. The first was Barbara, my small town, high school sweetheart, who at the age of thirty-one, after living half our lives together was killed in a tragic auto accident. Following Carol's death I was faced with the decision whether to continue life's journey alone or once again find a life partner with whom to grow old. Her name is Lily. We met on the Internet and have embarked on that most incredible journey of all – the one from which we don't need to return.

Faced not once, but twice, with the harsh reality of death and my own mortality, I determined I was unwilling to let death steal the joy of passing on a lifetime of fatherly advice to my teenage sons. Hence, Never Give Up On Love - a Memoir of Life, Love and Fatherly Advice. While the focus is fatherly advice, it is much more than that. It is advice wrapped around an American odyssey and my love for three amazing women, two of whom were tragically killed. So you don't get the wrong impression, this is not an 'Oh, Poor Me' book. It is an uplifting story of passion, drive, failure, success, friends, family, love AND fatherly advice, a scarce commodity in today's world.
