An Unspoken Suspicion: A Novel Françoise Bourdin

Daphné loves to spend time with her late husband's family in its sprawling mansion in the South of France. It was there that she spent the happiest years of her life married to Ivan before he died tragically in a domestic accident. Eight years on, she still spends time there with Max, her father-in-law, a famous sculptor who's been a recluse since his son's death; Nelly, the matriarch; and Ivan's siblings.

Daphné cannot help but feel unsettled as she realizes that her feelings for her husband's brother Dimitri are more than platonic. Dimitri tries to keep some distance between himself and Daphné and not give in to his feelings. But theirs is not the only secret. It seems everyone is hiding something, and some secrets are darker than others....
