Hadeel was not meant to live. Yet she did. Raised by an adoptive family, she grows into a strong-willed girl in the male-dominated society of pre-Islam Arabia. Upon learning she had been left in the desert as an infant to die only because she is female, Hadeel seeks to escape the bonds her gender imposes. Disguised as a boy named Assad, she initially finds the freedom she seeks, only to find her heart held captive by the charade when she falls in love. She must choose: the life being Assad affords her, or the man Hadeel has loved all along.
